DETAILED ACTION

1. Claims 1-16 are pending in this application.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

2. The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

(e) the invention was described in (1) an application for patent, published under section 122(b), by another filed in the United States before the invention by the applicant for patent or (2) a patent granted on an application for patent by another filed in the United States before the invention by the applicant for patent, except that an international application filed under the treaty defined in section 351(a) shall have the effects for purposes of this subsection of an application filed in the United States only if the international application designated the United States and was published under Article 21(2) of such treaty in the English language.

3. Claims 1-3, 5-12 and 14-16 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(e) as being anticipated by Iyengar et al. (6,038,393).

4. As to claim 1, Iyengar teaches the invention as claimed including a method for using a programmable digital computer to create object- oriented applications within a non-object-oriented software environment implemented on said programmable digital computer, wherein said non-object-oriented software environment is configured to allow creation of an application comprising one or more design elements (col. 3, lines 1-21), said method comprising the steps of creating, in accordance with a predetermined set of design standards (UML, col. 3, lines 20-21), an object within said non-object-oriented software environment ("legacy systems", col. 3 lines 12-16), wherein:

Art Unit: 2126

said object comprises at least one of said design elements (col. 3, lines 17-18);

said object is characterized by inbound public interfaces, outbound interfaces, and dependencies implemented using said design elements (standard characteristics of classes and components as described by UML, col. 3, lines 18-28);

transferring said object to said application (col. 3, lines 37-44);

determining, for said object, a level of compliance to said predetermined set of design standards (56, 58 Fig. 3B).

5. As to claim 2, Iyengar teaches the invention as claimed including predetermined set of design standards comprises naming standards and architectural standards (UML, col. 3, lines 22-29).

6. As to claim 5, Iyengar teaches the invention as claimed including said architectural standards comprise a graphical representation of said design elements configured in accordance with an object modeling technique (UML diagrams, col. 3 lines 22-29 and lines 50-56).

7. As to claim 6, Iyengar teaches the invention substantially as claimed including said architectural standards specify an order in which said design elements should appear in said object (UML specifies order in which public/private attributes and methods are to be listed).

8. As to claim 7, Iyengar teaches the invention substantially as claimed including said architectural standards specify a set of required design elements for said object (the relationships between objects, col. 3 lines 54-62).

9. As to claim 8, Iyengar teaches the invention substantially as claimed including a system for developing an object-oriented application within a non-object-oriented software environment provided on a digital computer (col. 3, lines 1-21), said system comprising:

at least one object repository for storing objects (col. 3, lines 63-67);

an application builder configured to allow transfer of said objects from said object repository to said object-oriented application (col. 4, lines 1-9);

an application analyzer for analyzing said object-oriented application and determining a level of compliance to a predetermined set of design standards (56, 58 Fig. 3B).

10. As to claim 9, Iyengar teaches the invention substantially as claimed including at least one carrier database ("Components" 30 Fig. 1), wherein said application builder is further configured to allow transfer of said objects from said carrier database to said repository (Fig. 1).

11. As to claim 10, Iyengar teaches the invention substantially as claimed including a code fragment library (col. 4, lines 22-28).

12. As to claim 11, it is rejected for the same reason as claim 2 above.

13. As to claims 14-16, they are rejected for the same reasons as claims 5-7 respectively.
14. As to claims 3 and 12, Iyengar teaches the invention substantially as claimed including said object has an object name associated therewith, and said naming standards specify that said name of said object comprises an element prefix, an object ID, and an element name (col. 9, lines 25-28 and 50-55).

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

15. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

16. Claims 4 and 13 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Iyengar et al. (6,038,393).
17. As to claims 4 and 13, Iyengar does not disclose said naming standards specify that said name of said object further comprises an instance number. However, use of instance numbers in specifying objects is well known in the art such as the use of "HANDLES".

18. It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time of the invention to use instance numbers in the name of the objects in order to specify multiple instances of the same object.
